THE WRECK OF THE "ERIE BELLE"

THE STORY OF THE OLD BOILER OF BOILER BEACH

On Wednesday, November 21, 1883, at 8:00 am, the Erie Belle, built in 1862, Cleveland, Ohio, pulled out of Kincardine harbour bound for the salvage of the schooner J.N. Carter, which was stranded in shoal water two miles south along the shoreline. Because of huge boulders that lie on the bottom of the lake rising near to the surface, the Erie Belle had to heave-to a considerable distance from shore. A news dispatch released in Kincardine gives account to what happened:

'About 3:30 this afternoon a loud report like the discharge of a 20 pounder cannon was heard in town, and while conjecturing the cause, word was received that the tug Erie Belle had blown up – though the vessel herself was lost – fortunately the lives of eight of the crew of twelve had been saved. What caused the accident will never be known. It is supposed the pump which supplied the boiler had become choked in some manner and that the trouble was not noticed by the engineer who was in charge. The water got low and when the pumps did force some water into the boiler it had the same effect as sparks on gunpowder.'

An engraving of a crew unloading coal from a schooner, with the tug Erie Belle alongside, from an 1884 advertisement for coal. From the 1884 book "Directory of the Marine Interests of the Great Lakes: Comprising A Complete List of All Vessels Navigating the Lakes, Arranged Alphabetically." Author unknown. R. L. Polk & Co., Detroit, MI., p 275.

Following the explosion the tug drifted in towards the shoreline where the boiler came to rest.

The wooden parts of the Erie Belle have long since been broken up and washed away.

A plaque and the boiler remain as a lasting memorial to Lake Huron sailors, located approximately two (2) miles south of Kincardine.
